

HIPAA and Beyond: the Challenges of Electronic Media in the Healthcare Workplace

Camera phones. PDAs. Email. Blogging. GPS. Flash drives. Laptops.

The meteoric expansion of technology in the workplace raises many legal issues. Quick, easy access to information and swift communication between staff can help an organization run smoothly, cut down on overhead, and free up time and energy to concentrate on your goals. When the workplace is a health-care clinic, however, all this raises concerns about privacy, data security, and record retention – for you, your employees, and your patients.

As a service to providers, the California Family Health Council and Public Counsel Law Center invite you to attend a free seminar, featuring speakers from the law firms of Morrison Foerster and Paul Hastings. We'll help you understand your rights and responsibilities as you use these exciting new technologies in your clinics.
